Style Manuals and Information on Writing Papers

Style manuals are guides that tell you exactly how to cite your sources for different disciplines. Your instructor will let you know what style to use.

If you are not sure whether to cite a source, it is always a good idea to air on the side of caution and include a citation.

The following is a link to Style Guides available at Charles Chesnutt Library

http://library.uncfsu.edu/reference/RefStyleMan.htm

Style Manuals in Print Available at Charles Chesnutt Library

Style Manuals are available in print at the Reference Desk or on Reserve at the Circulation Desk, which are both located on the first floor of the Library. There are also titles located in the Main Stacks and E-Book Titles.

APA Style (6th) Quick Guide

APA Style (6th) Quick Guide

This guide provides examples for selected research sources based on the style recommended in the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association (APA) (6th ed., 2010). In-text citations indicate the exact location for sources of information used in the text of the paper; the reference list describes the works from which the citations are taken.

NOTE: APA requires double-spacing between ALL text lines, including references. In an attempt to save space, this document has been formatted in single spacing.

Formatting your paper

APA style requires that you use parenthetical citations to document quotations, paraphrases, summaries, and other material from a source used in your paper corresponding to the full bibliographic entries found in a list of references included at the end of your paper. To cite a source in the text of your assignment, indicate in parentheses the last name of the author(s), or if there is no author, the first few words of the document title (in quotation marks), followed by the year of publication, and the page number. The following paragraphs show sample in-text citations:

In his classic study, Gardner (2004) summarizes the scepticism of current researchers and observers about whether the messages presented in the Fourth Assessment Report were really about the end of the World as we know it. His conclusion is that “anthropogenic global warming is occurring” (p. 22)¹ and human activities are to blame. But four renowned researchers (Tannenbaum, Leung, Sudha, & White, 2005)² who re-analysed published data have rejected the likelihood of human influence on recent climate and concluded that:

The current climate change is natural. The close of the millennium was marked by a deep suspicion of the natural world and an increasing reliance upon the pronouncements of soothsayers and visionaries, who caused hysteria with their doom-laden forecasts of the end of humanity. (p. 184)³
In-text citations and references

NOTE: See page 6 for author variations, e.g., how to cite a reference by more than one author, by a corporate author, or when no author is listed.

2. NEWSPAPER & MAGAZINE ARTICLES
APA Style

What is it? Developed by the American Psychological Association, APA style is widely used, not only in the social science and management but also in the humanities and natural sciences.

How do I do it? There are two parts to APA citation: in-text reference and the list of reference at the end. See The Purdue Online Writing Lab (http://owlenglish.purdue.edu) for detailed guidelines.

Don't forget - you must cite your source both 1. In-Text and in a 2. Reference List

1. In-text Citation
The in-text component of APA citation includes two main elements: the author's last name and the year of the publication (e.g., Ross, 1997). And the page number whenever quoting directly or paraphrasing a specific section of the text (e.g., Ross, 1997). For more than one author, list the names in the order they appear in the source. Refer to http://libguides.uncsfu.edu/APA vincitation.

2. Reference List
The list of references on your paper's last page is titled "References" and should be arranged in alphabetical order. Refer to the Reference List page for more information on how to cite works accurately at http://libguides.uncsfu.edu/referencelist.

School Culture

EFFECTIVE SCHOOL CULTURES MAINTAIN HIGH PERFORMANCE EXPECTATIONS that nurture students and foster joy in learning; these cultures are positive, productive, and intentional in the desire to integrate academic and social-emotional learning.

The following are the levers that help leaders implement a culture of high expectations:

- Establishing shared school mission, values, and behaviors focused on college success for every student
Balancing learning standards with students’ diverse learning needs

Author: Maureen E. Angell, Stephen K. Hunt, Lance R. Lipset, Marilyn Moore, Brent K. Simonds.

Series: Teaching diverse learners.

Summary: If diversity and special needs are prominent factors in a learning environment, teachers may have to juggle mandated standards with students’ personal challenges. This video addresses that balancing act, demonstrating how experienced educators have mastered it. Focusing on multilevel instructional planning, the program explores the use of educational channels, individualized support, and interpersonal engagement—showing how to deliver lessons and assess student progress based on communication style, learning preference, and other variables. An extensive bonus interview with Dr. Diane Ashby, Dean of Illinois State University’s College of Education, is included.

Abstract: There are few evaluations of peer-facilitated teenage dating violence prevention programs in the literature. To begin to address this gap, this project assessed the effectiveness of a school-based, peer-facilitated healthy relationships program among academically at-risk students. Two hundred and ninety-one ninth graders of mixed race and gender participated in a five-session healthy relationships program that had been adapted to address concerns of cultural relevance. Findings from analyses of variance showed that participants made statistically significant improvements from pretest to posttest, across demographics of race and gender. Results support the value of developing culturally responsive curricula and using peer-facilitated programming to address teenage dating violence in school-based healthy relationships programs.

KEY WORDS: dating; peer facilitators; school; teenagers; violence prevention

In response to teenage relationship violence, numerous prevention programs have been developed for youths, with the goals of improving participant attitudes and knowledge about healthy relationships, enhancing their skills to engage in healthy relationship behaviors, and reducing the relationships programming. Whereas some programs distinguish between teenage dating violence and healthy relationship components, in this article the authors use the terms teenage dating violence prevention and healthy relationship programming interchangeably. Youth Suicide Prevention: A Survey of Public School Superintendents' Acceptability of School-Based Programs

Abstract

From a random sample of members of the 2000-2001 membership directory of the American Association of School Administrators (AASA), public school administrators' acceptability ratings of three school-based programs for the prevention of adolescent suicide were examined. A total of 210 (46%) respondents examined a description of a suicide prevention program and completed a measure designed to evaluate the acceptability of suicide prevention programs. Three suicide prevention programs were evaluated for their acceptability, and included: (a) school-wide curriculum-based programs, presented to students; (b) in-service presentations to school staff, and (c) self-report screening programs for students. The results indicated that superintendents rated the staff in-service training and curriculum-based programs as significantly more acceptable than the school-wide screening program. In addition, the school-wide screening program was more intrusive by school psychologists than the staff in-service training or the school-wide screening program.
